

Wandlyn Way

©SGH Baillargeon 2016

Harry Potter and the other wizards in England purchase their supplies in the famous Diagon Alley in London but have you ever wondered where other wizards shop? In North America, the Wandlyn Way takes care of their needs.

Leaden Gold ~ Alchemist Shop

The second shop in Wandlyn Way was opened by the mysterious Leaden Gold. He insisted on being called "The GREAT Gold" even though no one had ever heard of him at the time. He was an Alchemist and he boasted that his shop stocked everything a wizard could ever need. Certainly it offered all kinds of chemicals and supplies for potions, bottles of interesting liquids, cauldrons for cooking said potions, broom sticks, walking sticks, crystal balls and miscellaneous one of a kind oddities that delighted the wizard population. Upstairs he had his laboratory where he followed the alchemist's quest to change lead into gold.

The kit includes everything shown in the exterior photo:

Carved stone front, courtyard walls, windows, carved door, and front portico.

The sides are not carved as the shops on each side will cover most of them.

In the interior, printed floors, staircase, window and door trim are also included.

The base has a carved cobblestone walk to match all the shops in the Wandlyn Way. The base size is 5" w x 6" deep.

The shop itself is 4" deep and 6.5" high with 2 floors.

Paypal invoices will go out in January. The kits will ship by the end of February.

The entire street will be available as separate shop kits. The street contains several different architectural styles in keeping with North American building styles as well as a few fond reminders of its Olde England roots. Each shop base is the same depth and the cobbled street in front of each shop joins them together. They can be lined up in any order. The kits will be issued every 2 or 3 months and initial orders for each will be accepted until the 15th of that month.
